The questions in the upcoming test will relate to the mentioned topic. If you carefully focus on all the subjects, you'll achieve good grades in the exam, and no issues will occur.

2. What are the ways the author discussed adapting the weather to an animal in the lesson "Desert Animal"?

The lesson talks about how animals in a desert survive where there's no water. Deserts are super dry, sometimes with no rain for months or even years. Since animals can't go without water for a long time, they come up with ways to adapt.

For instance, gerbils stay underground during the hottest part of the day. Darkling beetles are good at catching tiny bits of moisture on their legs to stay alive. Mongooses can quietly kill snakes. There are two types of camels: dromedary and bactrian camels. They store fat in their humps and eat it when there's nothing else to eat in the rocky American desert. This helps them have a backup for their stomachs in the future. So, the text teaches us different ways animals handle tough situations.
