Important Questions for Class 11 History Chapter 6 Displacing Indigenous People

Here are some important answers to the questions based on Class 11 History Chapter 6 Displacing Indigenous People:

Q.1. Why would have the chief counted the river-water as the blood of his ancestors?

Ans -

The chief may have referred to the river-water as the blood of his ancestors because the land, including the rivers, holds deep cultural and spiritual significance for indigenous people. The river was seen as a vital part of their life and heritage, connecting them to their ancestors' memories, traditions, and the natural world. The land and water are sacred to them, representing the continuity of life, culture, and history.

Q.2. What are the important points you consider in the history of North America and Australia?

Ans-

- Europeans dominated both North America and Australia.
- Europeans exploited and deceived native people, seizing their land and forcing them into reservations.
- Native people were peaceful, nature-loving, self-restrained, and sociable, in contrast to European settlers who were often greedy and driven by profit.

Q.3. Discuss the changes in landscapes of North America during the nineteenth century?

Ans-

During the 19th century, large areas of North America were converted into farmland and estates. European settlers cleared forests, turned them into agricultural land, and began growing crops like cotton and rice. The arrival of Europeans also led to the displacement of native people, who were forced onto reservations, and the use of barbed wire to fence off farmlands.

Q.4. What efforts did the natives of the northern states of the USA make to abolish slavery?

Ans-

In the Northern states, slavery was not widespread due to the lack of plantations. However, the people strongly condemned the practice of slavery, leading to protests and movements during the 1860s. The abolition of slavery in the U.S. was achieved in 1865, though racial discrimination persisted and continued to be fought by African-Americans in the 20th century.

Q.5. What was the case of the Cherokee tribe in North America?

Ans-

The Cherokee tribe, living in Georgia, made efforts to adapt to American society by learning English and adopting American customs. However, despite a 1832 court ruling recognizing their sovereignty, U.S. President Andrew Jackson ordered their forced removal to reservations, causing great suffering and hardship for the tribe.

Q.6. What were the pleas of the European people justifying their usurpation of natives' land?

Ans-

Europeans justified taking native land by claiming that the indigenous people were not fully utilizing the land and its resources. They argued that the native people were lazy and unproductive, and that Europeans were bringing progress and development by clearing the land, building farms, and killing off wild animals like the bison.

Q.7. Discuss the different images that Europeans and native Americans had of each other.

Ans -

Europeans' perspective of Native Americans: They viewed native people as uncivilized, lazy, and foolish. They thought the indigenous people were not properly using the land and were resistant to "progress."

Native Americans' perspective of Europeans: They were initially curious about the Europeans and tried to share the land with them, although they soon saw that Europeans wanted to own the land. The natives were surprised by the Europeans' practices, such as clearing forests and dividing land into plots of ownership.

Q.8. Comment on the population data of the USA and Spanish America in the 19th century.

Ans-

The population data shows a sharp decline in the native population from 7.5 million in 1800 to just 0.6 million in 1820, while the white population grew significantly during the same period. This decline in the native population was due to forced relocation, diseases, and violence caused by European colonization.

Q.9. Comment on the statement by historian Howard Spodek: "For the indigenous (people) the effects of the American Revolutions were exactly opposite to those of the settlers."

Ans-

The indigenous people experienced the opposite effects of the American Revolution compared to the settlers. While settlers gained freedom and expanded their territory, native people lost their lands and were confined to reservations. They faced increased poverty, lack of rights, and were subjected to discrimination and violence.

Benefits of Solving Important Questions for Class 11 History Chapter 6

Solving important questions for Class 11 History Chapter 6 provide several benefits to students, especially in terms of understanding the subject more deeply and performing well in exams. Here are some key benefits:
